

Borough High Street

3

A LITTLE BIT OF HUMOUR FOR EVERYONE WHO LIVES AND WORKS, OR LIVED AND WORKED, ON THIS GREAT STREET

Due to the increasing demand from local pavement residents we have produced a beneficial and useful new idea to attract further participants to partake in the ancient art of urinating in public. We attach a detailed map of areas that might be found useful in their search for satisfactory ablutions.

The British Street Tourist Board provided funding for this original scheme and map production. They stated in their recent press conference; -

“The influx of tourists and office workers into the Southwark area, together with the increase of hotels, means that there are a lot more visitors looking for things to do. This new tour, which we have titled ‘The Haunts and Colloquialisms of Local Street Sleepers’ will provide visitors to the area a more detailed picture of wear public urination takes place. we hope that this wil give visitors a better understanding on why Borough High Street looks and smells like a hell hole. With any luck we might even have visitors participating in this very public act.

We hope that through advertising the street will become even more of a haunt for people wanting participate in what is rapidly becoming a 24 hours visual extravaganza that has not been seen for decades, possibly as far back as Dickensian times. We welcome such original attractions and will be considering adding this to our in-flight booklets for the area.”

Southwark Conservation group ‘Conservation Urination Nature Team’ stated: -

“Borough High Street is a fertile and historical ground for public displays of liquid dispersal. The area since its days as farm land has been used by people and animals alike for the unloading of physical biproducts. In fact, as far back as the Roman times people used the area as a latrine. Although images do not exist our researches have uncovered a painting from the 1700’s depicting this tradition in the area”.

The following map aims to assist visitors in viewing this tradition and, if they feel inclined, pisssticipating (sic) in this historical and free pastime.

21st century picture showing urinating man

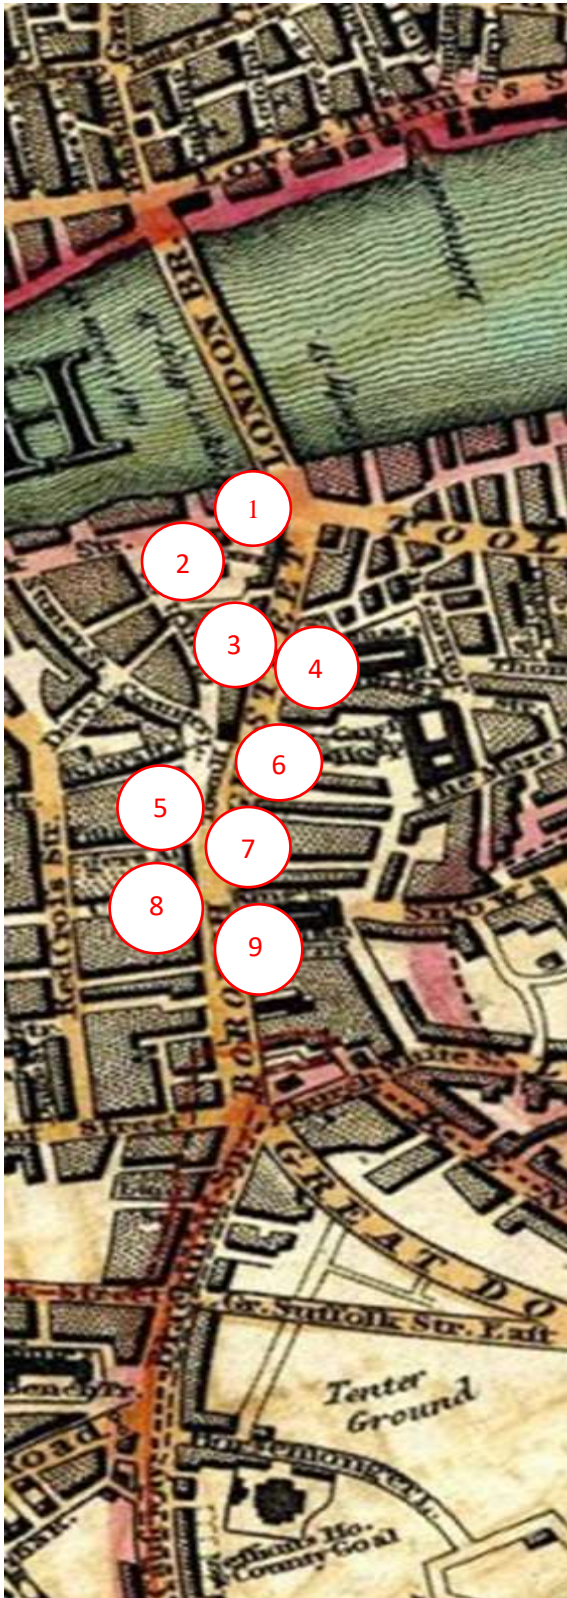

18th century picture showing urinating man

Borough High Street

3

A LITTLE BIT OF HUMOUR FOR EVERYONE WHO LIVES AND WORKS, OR LIVED AND WORKED, ON THIS GREAT STREET

1). ARCHES BELOW LONDON BRIDGE

A pleasant sheltered space with secluded zones for personal pleasure. Not private, with plenty of scope for tourist interaction.

2). BOROUGH MARKET

A dream place for the seasoned street user. Plenty of small nooks and crannies for both private and public display. Plenty of wall faces to avoid shoe contamination.

3). COUNTER COURT

Surrounded by large wheelie bins, this secluded alleyway provides an ideal location for both group and private events. Proximity to local bars and restaurants means speed and efficiency for relief. Ideally located between venue and underground station.

4). TALBOT YARD

Another superb location providing plenty of corners to provide privacy for the individual. The location has the added bonus of providing direct access to Guy's Hospital and small garden, where the full enjoyment of green landscaping personal watering can be experienced.

5). 56 BOROUGH HIGH STREET

An extremely interesting recessed doorway where visitors have the benefit of viewing local property prices, adding reading matter to maximise the experience. (Billy Broughton who frequents this doorway for relaxation purposes during the evening has pointed out that he will beat the living daylights out of anyone he finds doing it in his doorway).

6). QUEEN'S HEAD YARD

Another very private alleyway of historical importance. It is understood that during a heavy drinking bout in the local public house, the Queen at that time, following a fulfilling and enjoyable squat, left fully relieved and recommended the spot to her courtiers who returned and left their mark. A royal and historic spot,

7). ST. CHRISTOPHERS INN YARD

Recently extended as far as the new Holiday Inn this 'U' shaped route provides plenty of opportunities. The living green wall provides a novel upright experience with small containers to practice even distribution of liquid. A great novel experience not to be missed.

8). TURKISH BANK

Unfortunately, now closed following the introduction of a security shutter across the superb recessed and stepped accommodation with integral side relief area.

9). TESCO'S GATEWAY BOROUGH HIGH STREET

A secluded recessed area which is user friendly and offers large open bars to offer support to persons who feel slightly faint. Provides adequate room for two to five people standing abreast. A lovely area for groups to enjoy. The vast selection of beers available during shop opening hours means that persons can top up and maintain a continuous stream of enjoyment.